Federal Law

Marijuana is still illegal under federal law. The Controlled Substances Act (CSA) classifies marijuana as a Schedule I drug, which means that it has no accepted medical use and a high potential for abuse. This classification makes it illegal to possess, use, or distribute marijuana under federal law.

However, the federal government has taken steps to relax its enforcement of marijuana laws in recent years. In 2013, the Department of Justice issued a memo that instructed federal prosecutors to focus on enforcing marijuana laws against large-scale drug traffickers and not against individuals who are using or possessing small amounts of marijuana for personal use.

State Laws

The majority of states have legalized medical marijuana, and a growing number of states have legalized recreational marijuana. As of 2020, 33 states have legalized medical marijuana, and 11 states have legalized recreational marijuana.

The laws governing medical marijuana and recreational marijuana vary from state to state. In general, medical marijuana is available to patients who have a qualifying medical condition, such as cancer, chronic pain, or epilepsy. Recreational marijuana is available to adults over the age of 21 for recreational use.

Legal Developments

The legal landscape of cannabis is constantly evolving. In recent years, we have seen a number of important legal developments, including:

- The legalization of recreational marijuana in several states
- The relaxation of federal enforcement of marijuana laws
- The growth of the legal cannabis industry
- The increasing acceptance of cannabis as a legitimate medicine

These developments suggest that the legal landscape of cannabis is moving towards legalization. However, it is important to remember that marijuana is still illegal under federal law, and there is still a great deal of confusion about the legal status of cannabis in different states.
