The Planning of the Raid

The planning for the raid on bin Laden's compound began in earnest in early 2011. A team of intelligence analysts and military planners was assembled to study bin Laden's movements and to develop a plan for the raid. The planners considered a number of different options, including a ground assault, an airstrike, and a sniper attack. In the end, they decided on a ground assault as the most effective way to capture or kill bin Laden.

The SEALs who were selected to carry out the raid were given extensive training. They practiced storming the compound, clearing rooms, and engaging in close-quarters combat. They also studied bin Laden's habits and movements so that they would be prepared for anything he might do.
