The family law system is a broken mess. It's a system that is designed to protect the interests of mothers, at the expense of fathers and other non-custodial parents. It's a system that is rife with corruption and injustice. And it's a system that needs to be changed.

In her groundbreaking book, The Respondent, Susan Smith exposes the dark underbelly of the family law system. She draws on her own personal experience as a 'respondent' in a family court case to provide a searing indictment of a system that she believes is stacked against fathers and other non-custodial parents.

Smith's story is a chilling one. She was married to a man who was abusive and controlling. When she finally found the courage to leave him, he took her to court for custody of their two children. Smith was unprepared for the nightmare that followed. She was subjected to a barrage of false accusations and character attacks. She was denied access to her children for months on end. And she was ultimately forced to give up custody of her children to her ex-husband.

Smith's story is not unique. It is a story that is repeated over and over again in family courts across the country. Fathers and other non-custodial parents are routinely denied their rights. They are subjected to false accusations and character attacks. They are denied access to their children for months or even years on end.

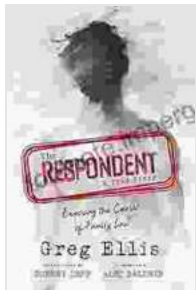

The family law system is a broken mess. It's a system that is designed to protect the interests of mothers, at the expense of fathers and other non-custodial parents. It's a system that is rife with corruption and injustice. And it's a system that needs to be changed.

The Respondent is a must-read for anyone who cares about justice and fairness in the family law system. It is a powerful indictment of a system that is broken and in need of reform.
